

Mother's Day: A day for children to recognize their mom's hard work

Written by Anna Grace Bricker, Staff Writer

According to Chloe Steigerwald, a seventh grader, Mother's Day is a day to "appreciate everything your mom has done for you." This Mother's Day, which takes place on May 8, students share what they do for their moms and the importance of this special day.

Moms do a lot for their children, and for this Mother's Day students explain why they treat their moms on Mother's Day.

"She does a lot for me and she's my mother," said Chase Camper, a seventh grade student at Faith.

Many students agree with Camper.

"My mom does so many things for me. She pays for this school, she takes me to soccer practice, and she provides me with everything I need," said Steigerwald.

Students certainly can't drive their moms to a special dinner or take them on a road trip, but students at Faith have their own special way to make their mothers feel special.

"I give my mom a massage, then I do her nails, make her breakfast, and then I make her dinner," said Steigerwald.

Other students also do things along those lines.

"I buy her flowers, and I give her a foot massage and make dinner," said Camper.

Dillard's in Downtown Summerlin puts up Mother's Day signs to get people aware and interested in their Mother's Day gift items. Multiple other stores also put up signs to advertise their Mother's Day sales.

"We go to my grandma's house, and we have a Mother's Day party with all my aunts," said Faith Lutheran seventh grader Zoie Abdo. "Then we have dinner and get the moms gifts."

Many students think that it is important for students to celebrate their moms on Mother's Day for many different reasons.

Steigerwald thinks it's important "because moms do so much, and it's rude if you don't appreciate what they do."

Other students think moms should get rewarded for their hard work.

"Mother's do a lot of things for their families, and they should get rewarded for it," said Abdo.

Some students like to give gifts instead of doing service for their moms, but not everyone has money just lying around and not everyone has a dad to take them to the store right away. There are multiple inexpensive items students can create at home that their moms will love.

The next time students eat dinner that came from a tin can, save the can. Students can paint the can and decorate it with washi tape, ribbon, or stickers to make a cute Do It Yourself (DIY) vase to hold flowers.

Students can find this DIY and many inexpensive others on countryliving.com.

Places that sell flowers, cards, treats, and other Mother's Day gifts make sure their costumers get the best price, and so usually, companies make Mother's Day deals.

Places, such as Amazon, are giving customers "up to 80% off Mother's Day Gift Ideas," according to dealsplus.com.

Other places offer deals on online shipping.

According to www1.macys.com, Macy's is giving "free shipping with (a) qualifying purchase" on their online website.

But, whatever students get their moms, most will make sure their mother feels special this Mother's Day.
